With "Magic Wand" by Little Wings Ahornfelder widens its genre variance once more to include an album we believe to be so genuinely beautiful that here's the first non-instrumental album so far. After Kyle Field, the singer and head of the changing line-up of Little Wings, released his book of drawings "Put It In A Nutshell" on Ahornfelder early 2007 it's wonderful to release his music now too.

Little Wings' sound is characterized the most by Kyle Field's notable voice. With a very unique sound he creates lush folky guitar-based tunes revolving around situations he may have experienced. But it's the poetic, stream of conscious way these images are described that establishes the special atmosphere of Kyle's lyrics. Sometimes they're reminding of the Beach Boys, sometimes more like contemporary American lofi-folk. In any way, you here a nature- and sea-loving man expressing his way of living and seeing his surrounding. And with the words and imagery he chooses his songs each establishes associations and feelings beyond simple tunes. With his always changing band he recorded an album that may well be the one sounding more like a studio-recording than the albums before. The way harmonic pop tunes and more expressive passages are alternating makes this work so special and abiding.

Kyle Field lives in California and gets through by playing music with Little Wings and Be Gulls and making drawings and riding waves.
